

Articles

THE CONVENTION ON CULTURAL DIVERSITY AND INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC LAW

*Michael Hahn

ABSTRACT

The paper presents and analyses the possible effects of the UNESCO Convention on Cultural Diversity (CCD) on both strands of international economic law: the multilateral WTO regime and the multitude of PTAs. While the analysis shows that the immediate legal effect on international economic law would be a limited one, the CCD's political relevance could very well make it the starting point for new legal developments.

KEYWORD: Cultural Diversity, International Economic Law, UNESCO, WTO, CCD, cultural product, GATT, GATS, PTA

* Professor of Law, University of Waikato Law School, Hamilton, New Zealand; Dozent, Europa-Institut, Universität des Saarlandes, Saarbrücken, Germany; hahn@waikato.ac.nz. The author is much indebted to Professor Chang-fa Lo and his team. Many thanks are also due to this Journal's editor-in-chief and the editors whose reviews were most helpful.